

LOOKING INTO
FALL OF LAKEInvestigation Being Made by
Section Director Murdoch.BASED ON GROWTH OF BRUSH
TO REMAIN AT PRESENT LEVEL
FOR SEVENTEEN YEARS.

A NOVEL line of investigation that may throw some light on the mysterious fluctuations of Great Salt Lake has been begun by Section Director Murdoch of the local water bureau. By determining how much time must elapse before sage brush and greasewood can grow upon the banks of the lake, he is endeavoring to ascertain an estimate as to the time of the lake's fall in times gone by, and some calculation made as to how long the lake may be expected to remain at the level which it has attained now.

His investigations so far indicate that if the lake does as it evidently did before these valleys were settled, the present low level will maintain for at least seventeen years. It has been claimed by old residents that the lake rises and falls in cycles of thirty-four years, and these valleys seem to be the result of this common belief.

Mr. Murdoch's investigations are based entirely upon the growth of vegetation on the shore line, and this method seems to be quite accurate.

The investigations made by Mr. Murdoch are made from these facts. The level of the lake is known to have been just about the same as it is now in 1847, when the pioneers first settled in these valleys.

Gilbert, the geologist, who made a study of the great lake and the surrounding country about that time, states that in 1847 sage brush and greasewood were growing down to the storm line of the shore—that is, to the line reached by the salt water when the waves were blown over the bank by storm winds.

Storm Line Varies.

This line is said to have varied from three feet on steep banks to ten or fifteen feet on the more level shores.

Gilbert estimated that in order for these plants to have been enabled to grow upon the shore, the water must have been above the water level for from forty to 100 years, that the rains could have washed the banks sufficiently free from salt for these salt-loving plants to grow. From these estimates he concluded that the lake had been at the level it then stood at for perhaps a century.

In 1876 the level of the lake reached the highest point that is on record, and the vegetation that had grown upon the banks before was, of course, killed. Since that year the water has gradually receded, until it has reached the point at which it now stands.

The recession of the waters since that known time has, of course, furnished an opportunity to determine exactly the time necessary for sage brush to grow upon the unsmothered banks.

Growth of Vegetation.

Investigations made by Mr. Murdoch show that this class of vegetation is growing over the banks from the water line of 1876 down to the water line of the present time is just seventeen years, showing that only seventeen years of that time is required for the unsmothered banks to become vegetated.

From this Mr. Murdoch argues that the water level found when the valley was settled must have been at that level for at least seventeen years, and not necessarily for any greater length of time.

These facts, taken in connection with the records of the lake level, which seem to indicate that there has been a rise and fall in a rough cycle of thirty-four years, is taken to indicate that we may have the present level for seventeen years. The level taken yesterday was two feet and eleven inches below zero.
